Commitment To Repair

Repair is now on everyone’s lips—as an act, a method, an agent of change, a solution. The recent publications “UPGRADE: Making Things Better” and the ARCH+ issue “The Great Repair”, as well as the ongoing exhibition “Repair Revolution!” at the Museum für Gestaltung in Zurich communicate the different approaches to repair and reflect on our habits of production and consumption as a society. But are we truly “committed to repair”?

Do we know what that commitment entails? How can we transform from—a society, a profession, an economy—which considers the new as “the highest good” to one which demands “the right to repair”?
