SESSIONS ON TERRITORY is a series of public debates on the political economy and ecologies of urban space, landscape and territory, curated collaboratively with LUS Talks. This series explores conservation as process, ideology, and a field of practice shaped by—and shaping—territory, capital, and politics. Rather than treating conservation as a neutral endeavor, the series foregrounds its contradictions, contested objectives, and material consequences across different socio-spatial contexts—from Berlin, Athens, and Zurich to Nairobi. It brings together diverse voices capturing multiplicities of conservation, and thinks through its practices collectively.
