

Ušće Mali Pejzaži

Ušće Park of Little Landscapes: Growing New Friendships

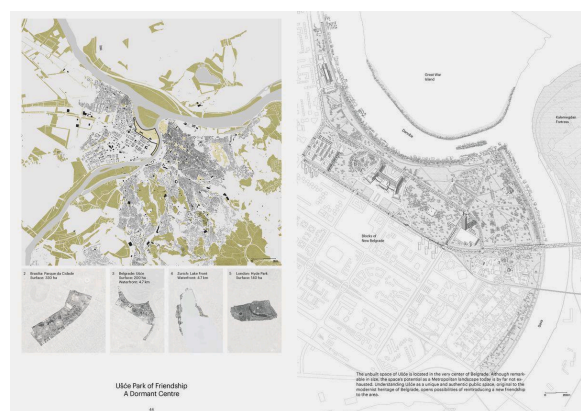

Rafael Schäfer and Klara Sladeckova

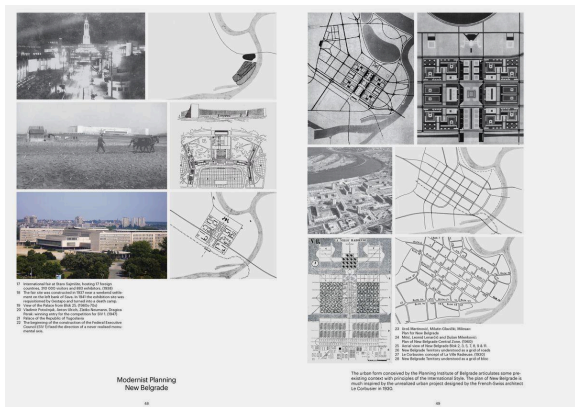

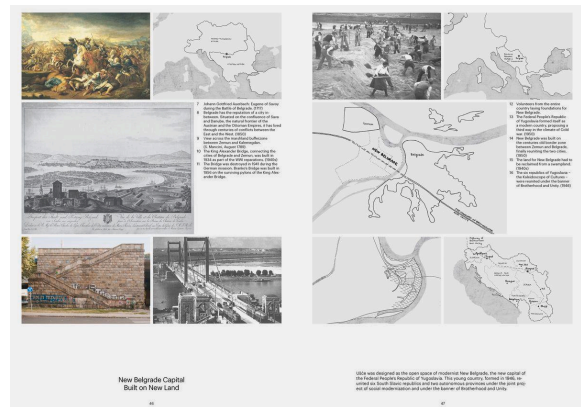

Along the left bank of the Sava, before the construction of New Belgrade in the middle of the 20th century, there was nothing but sparse settlements and fishers' barracks. For centuries, this terrain was a no-mans-land along the border zone of the Ottoman and the Austrian and Austro-Hungarian empires. After the Kingdom of Yugoslavia was unified between the two World Wars, the Sava River was no longer a national border. This development enabled various planning strategies for the urbanisation of this marshland. In the 1930s, under King Alexander I, the Staro Sajmište fairgrounds were erected to house international expositions and promote the economy of the newly independent state. After WWII, when the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia was formed under Josip Broz Tito, a modernist urban development was planned and implemented for this site. New Belgrade was to become the modern symbol of the young socialist state.

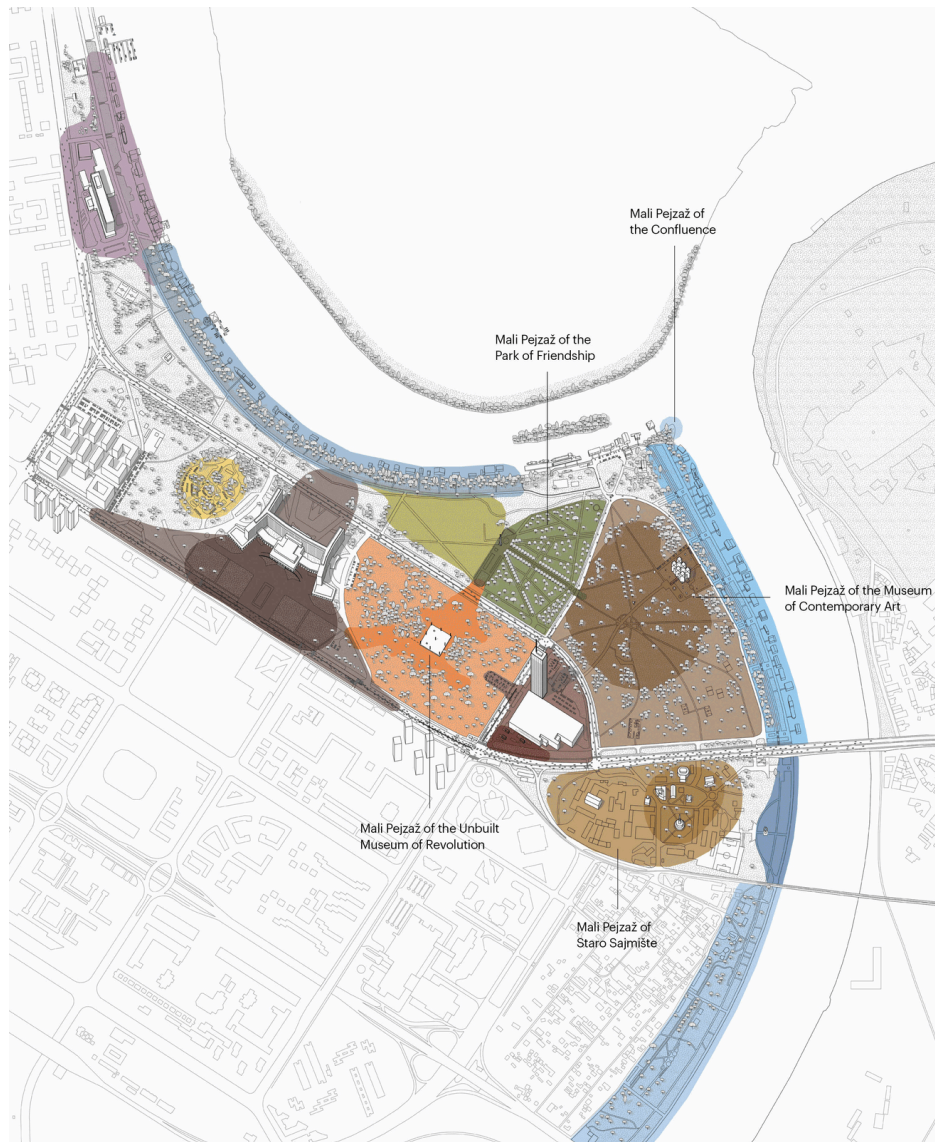

The Park of Friendship played a crucial representative role in the new socialist republic. As an expression of modernist architecture and urban planning— with structures such as the former residency of the government of Yugoslavia, the Museum of Contemporary Art, or towers in the green—the park unified political aspirations with an open landscape. New public rituals reinforced its monumental character, such as official state guests being invited to plant trees along the alleys. The transition to a capitalist system threatened the continuity of this green space, which initially extended into New Belgrade's housing blocks. Parcelled up and sold for private development, many open spaces have been rebuilt with commercial facilities, sports halls, and car parks. The encroaching growth peaked with the Ušće shopping mall completion in 2009, transforming the public plaza in front of the former Communist Party headquarters into a commercial centre and the tower itself into a bank. Today, the adjacent Friendship Park is the most significant open space in New Belgrade.

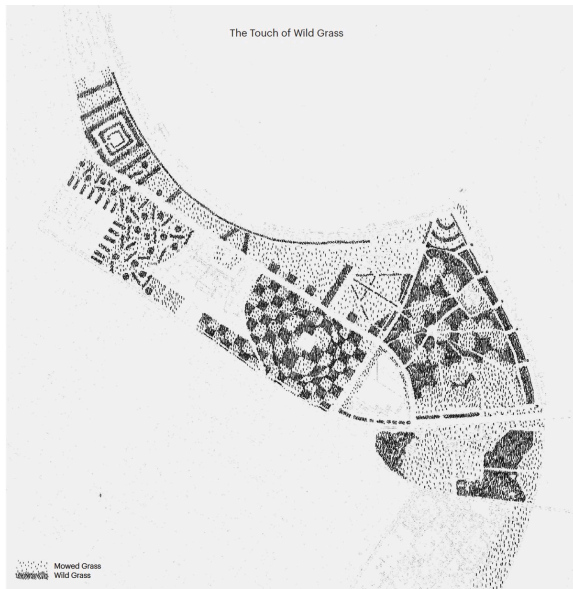

As the memories of the site's political past fade and its modernist features as a non-programmed, open space are contested, the project explores possibilities to re-imagine the Ušće landscape under the contemporary pressure for leisure, commerce, and development. Thanks to its heritage and position in Belgrade's centre, Ušće Park has the potential to become a unique public area for Belgrade—currently dormant with only a few in-tense moments and poorly connected, vanishing from the citizens of Belgrade's psycho-geography. The project reveals Ušće as a patchwork of interwoven miniature landscapes or mali pejzaži; each gathered around “architectural gems.” For now, this system is too loose and fails to generate an intelligible unity. The proposal Ušće Park of Little Landscapes: Growing New Friendships is an attempt to reclaim Ušće's role as a symbolic public space for the city. It brings one of Belgrade's largest parks back to life, aiming to create a coherent space with changing characters of growing new friendships.

Ušće Park of Little Landscapes

Through three strategies, we will strengthen the fabric of Mali Pejzaži and seek to interweave the different characters and intensities into one space. The “united surface” strategy operates on the urban scale; it aims to signal the coherence of the entire Ušće. The “common threshold” acts on the Mali Pejzaži limits, bringing them together around a shared space. A series of “punctual interventions,” oriented toward public life, will concentrate activity around the interconnected nuclei of the Mali Pejzaži.

Additionally, the two projects “Touch of Wild Grass” and “Planting Trees with Friends”, focus on giving Ušće consistent yet locally specific textures of wild grasses and trees powered by citizens’ participation. Each year, competition amongst the citizens of Belgrade will provide a plan of wild grass pattern for the park, which the gardeners would then implement. “Planting Trees with Friends” will invite Belgraders to come and plant a tree of friendship, perpetuating the Non-Aligned Movement’s (NAM) ritual of goodwill. New trees will spread across Ušće, bringing together a community of guardians of Ušće. The landscape will symbolise shared values and a familiar democratic gesture. The long space for public gatherings proposes a T-shaped shared-use street, which could be entirely pedestrian on weekends and during summer.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

We would like to thank Metaxia Markaki, Adrienne Wilson, and Dubravka Sekulić for the many bright observations and inputs during the reviews. Our understanding of the site would have been very poor if not for the valuable insight of Dragana Ćorović, Davor Ereš and Nebojša Milikić from Belgrade. We thank them for the time and the knowledge they were so kind to share with us. Finally, thanks to Andjelija, Pavle, Tijana, Aleksa, Luka, Sara, and Andrija from the Faculties of Forestry and Architecture, who welcomed us into their town and made our stay in Belgrade an immensely joyful experience.

SOURCES

- “Art-e-Fact. Strategies of Resistance.” Accessed December 2018. http://artefact.mi2.hr/index_en.htm
- “Generalni Plan Begradea, 1950.” Accessed December 2018. www.urbel.com.
- Hotel Jugoslavija, documentary by Nicolas Wagnières, 2017.
- Kulić, Maroje Mrduljaš Vladimir. Unfinished Modernizations: Between Utopia & Pragmatism. Maribor. Udruženje Hrvatskih Arhitekata. 2012.
- Le Normand Brigitte. Designing Tito's Capital: Urban Planning, Modernism, and Socialism in Belgrade. Pittsburgh: University of Pittsburgh Press, 2014.
- Marić, Igor; Niković, Ana; Manić, Božidar. “Transformation of the New Belgrade urban tissue: Filling the space instead of interpolation”, Spatium no. 22. 2010: 47–56.
- Milan Prelog. “Yugoslavia: A Kaleidoscope of Cultures.” New York: UNESCO Courier 33. (November 1980): 4–18.
- Museum of the Revolution, trailer by by Srđan Keča of his 3-channel video installation for the Serbian pavilion at the 2014 Venice Architecture Biennale. Accessed December 2018. <https://vimeo.com/95988237>
- “Muzej Jugoslavije.” Accessed December 2018. <https://muzej-jugoslavije.org>.
- “Old Belgrade.” Plan grada i tvrdave Begradea. Accessed December 2018. <https://bibliodyssey.blogspot.com/2008/07/old-belgrade.html>.
- “Ratko Mladić.” Wikipedia. Accessed December 2018. https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ratko_Mladić.
- “Serbian Monitor.” Accessed December 2018. <https://serbianmonitor.com>.
- “Slobodan Milošević.” Wikipedia. Accessed December 2018. https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Slobodan_Milošević.
- “Stare slike Novog Beograda.” Facebook Account. Accessed December 2018. <https://www.facebook.com/stareslikeNBGD>.
- Stierli Martino, Kulić Vladimir. Toward a Concrete Utopia: Architecture in Yugoslavia, 1948–1980. New York: MoMA, 2018.
- “Traffic on the King Alexander bridge, late 1930s,” transpress enz. Accessed December 2018. <https://transpressnz.blogspot.com/2012/02/traffic-on-king-alexander-bridge.html>.
- “Urbanistički Zavod Grada Begradea, Generalni Urbanistički Plan Begradea, March 1972.” Accessed December 2018. www.urbel.com

This work by Rafael Schäfer and Klara Sladeckova was created as part of the design studio Beograd Unbuilt (2/2) at ETH Zurich in Fall 2018. The PDF is intended for educational purposes only. Its commercial distribution is strictly forbidden.

© 2025, Architecture of Territory

Architecture of Territory
Professor Milica Topalović

TEACHING TEAM

Hans Hortig
Karoline Kostka
Metaxia Markaki
Ferdinand Rabe von Pappenheim
Milica Topalović
Adrianne Wilson

Prof. Milica Topalović
ETH Zurich
ONA G41
Neunbrunnenstrasse 50
8093 Zurich
Switzerland
+41 (0)44 633 86 88
www.topalovic.arch.ethz.ch